HONGRONG, MAY 25TH, 1892.

THE piratical instruct has always been strong in the breasts of the maritime population of South China. Piracy flourished without check for several hundred years, and the rovers of the seas grew ever more audacious until in the middle of the sixteenth century they actually established a blockade of the port of Canton, and the Viceroy was compelled to seek the aid of the Portuguese, who had recently established a settlement at Macao. The Portuguese manned and armed a few vessels and succeeded not only in raising the blockade of Canton but also in temporarily clearing the coast of the pirates. In recognition of this service the Kwangtung Government allowed the occupation of the Macao peninsula by their deliverers; a cheap payment for a signal service. But piracy was only scotched not killed, and it woke into great activity again early in the present century.
